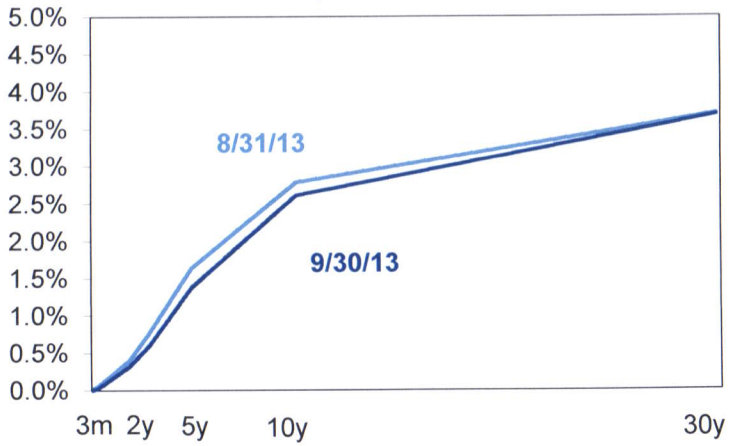
Recent Treasury Yield Curves



After catching investors off guard with talk of "tapering" their bond purchases in May, the Fed surprised the financial markets again at their September meeting. Citing tightening financial conditions resulting from the rise in bond yields and the looming budget debate and debt ceiling resolution, the Fed took no action. The result was a quick downtick in bond yields which had been rising in anticipation of tapering. The yield on the 2 and 5-year Treasury declined 8 and 26 basis points respectively.

The FMIvT High Quality 0-2, 1-3 and Intermediate Bond Funds underperformed their benchmarks in September. Each of the Funds had a shorter than benchmark duration which detracted from performance.

Global Economy

After months of anticipation that the Federal Reserve (Fed) would scale back its $85 billion of monthly bond purchases, policy makers unexpectedly decided to maintain their current buying pace. Worries that tightening financial conditions and continued wrangling in the nation's capitol could slow economic growth were the primary concerns of the Fed. The central bank left unchanged its outlook that its target interest rate will remain near zero as long as the unemployment rate exceeded 6.5% and inflation remained no higher than 2.5%.

Inflation remains fairly benign as consumer prices rose less than forecast in August largely due to declining gasoline prices. The consumer price index increased 0.1%, the least in three months, according to Labor Department data. The core CPI measure, which strips out food and fuel, also rose 0.1% representing an increase of 1.8% from August 2012, which remains below the Feds 2.5% target.

The European Central Bank kept its benchmark main refinancing rate at 0.5% for a fifth month, last reducing the rate by a quarter point in May. Policy makers noted that incoming economic data showed "gradual improvement from low levels" and that interest rates will "remain at the current or lower level for an extended period of time." Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe decided to move forward with a planned tax increase on consumer sales due to confidence that the economy was showing sufficient recovery to withstand higher taxes. The consumption tax will rise to 8% from 5% in April 2014.

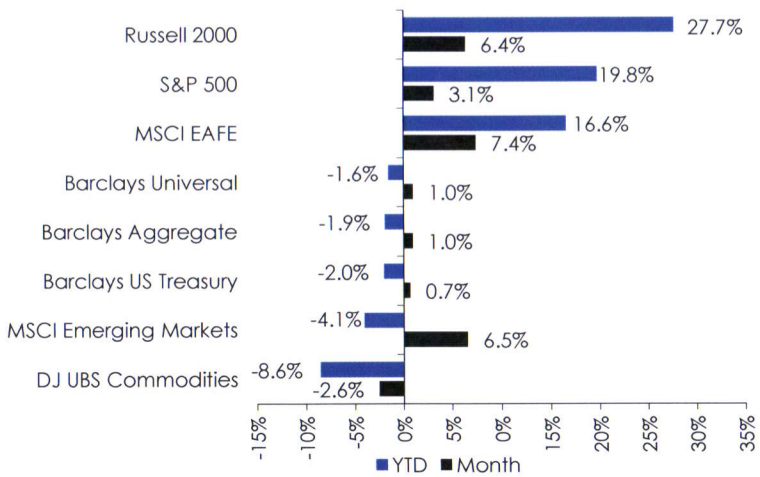
Global Markets

Key Market Indices



Stocks rose globally after Fed policy makers joined the European Central Bank and Bank of Japan in continuing to provide monetary stimulus to promote economic growth, increasing investor appetites for riskier assets. European shares climbed to their highest levels since June 2008, closing September with gains of 4.5%, while Japanese shares soared 8.5%, the largest gain since April 2013.

US equities jumped to record highs on September 18 as investors cheered the Federal Reserve's decision to delay tapering bond purchases. The Dow Jones industrial Average rose 147 points to 15,676.94 while the S&P 500 index advanced 21 points to an all time high of 1,725.52. However, US stocks pared gains by month's end as it appeared the US congress would fail to approve legislation to keep the federal government operating.

Data on China's economy signaled the world's second largest economy is strengthening after manufacturing activity hit a 17-month high, helping set the tone for a rally in emerging market stocks. The MSCI Emerging Markets index touched its highest point since May 29 before settling lower by month's close logging a gain of 6.5% in September.

Gold prices stumbled in September despite the Fed's decision to continue their monthly bond buying, amid speculation the US economy would start to accelerate during the fourth quarter, decreasing the attractiveness of gold. An improving geopolitical situation helped send oil prices to their lowest level since July 3 after the United Nations approved a plan to reduce Syria's chemical weapons inventory. Oil retreated 4.9% to $102.33 a barrel.

After reaching a two-year high on September 5 of 3.01%, US 10-year Treasury yields declined on the Fed's announcement that they will continue to support government bond prices with monthly bond buying until there is more evidence of sustainable improvement in the US economy. Yields on 10-year Treasuries dropped 17 basis points (bps) to 2.61% in September, up from 1.93% on May 21, the day before the Fed suggested they could start reducing asset purchases later in 2013. Treasury prices reversed four straight monthly losses in September with a gain of 0.8%.

Political uncertainty roiled Italy's sovereign debt markets in September after ex-premier Silvio Berlusconi threatened to withdraw his party's support for the recently elected Prime Minister Enrico Letta, forcing Letta to request a confidence vote from parliament to save his administration. 10-year yields reached 4.66%, the highest level in more than three months before falling to 4.43% by month's end indicating markets believed Letta would receive the necessary support.

German sovereign bonds rallied sending 10-year yields to 1.78% from 1.86% in August. Emerging market bond prices moved higher in September as the JPMorgan EMBI Global index gained 2.7% while the premium to own emerging market debt over US Treasuries fell to 355 bps from 375 bps the prior month.
